This would have to be an early hour to see the heavy misty morning view of reflections and smoke on the roof of Caddy Green. It's hard to believe the trees, bushes, and the surrounding landscape of the village, is a total part of what was formerly a large meadow through which the River Great Ouse ran until about 1905. It is now a very pleasant and busy area of the village.

Dad Street is an attractive row of three houses and cottages, large and small, built from the 18th century up to the present day. Each one is unique and they are well preserved. However, they are not well maintained and as the photographer came across a roadworks site, it was difficult to get in to the afternoon session. This street was one of the most beautiful in the village.

The imposing view of the rear of St. Michael's Church encompasses the historical building and performance location. There has been a church here since the 12th century and it still remains, in substantial strength. The church and tower were built in 1862. It was built by the architect James Fowler and is a Grade II listed building.

Every spring time sheep and their lambs can be seen grazing on the Pasture Meadows, the field purchased for the village with donations made by many residents in 2012. Just long after the purchase the Environment Agency visited the parcel which is linked to the river. The whole area has been landscaped and is a very nice place to visit.
